Radiation Suit

The protagonist's main attire for the game. A radiation suit is always given to people who dare scavage through the irradiated Grand Springs

The suit is one of two pieces the player uses for their outfit. Though not as important as the filter, keeping it can tank some of the area's radiation.

Gas Filter

The filter can be found on the corpses of previous scavengers.

Obtaining them can give you a backup filter that you can swap midgameplay, extending your time within the city.

Filters can be found on the bodies of deceased people who previously entered the town. Their amount ranges, depending on what part of the town the filter was found.

Your main source of health in the game.
These filters are limited and can end your experience if you run out

Machete

Colors: A rusted silver blade attached to a light brown wooden base.

The Machete is rusted from it's use by the previous user and surrounding radiation.
This makes the Machete an unreliable home breaking tool due to it's corrosion and use.

Your classic Machete, a steel blade attached to a wooden base. Though, the radiation has rusted the object and weakened it in the process.

The machete is found at the start of the Grand Springs area. It's location shows that the user of the object died unprepared and passed away early.

The keycard is the final item you can obtain to enter homes, specifically in the rich areas of Grand Springs.

Much more reliable than a crowbar or battered machete.

The classic security card, and with it being from a high ranking officer, it's the perfect detail you need to complete your personal mission.

A tool that's more connected to homebreaking, the Crowbar is much more reliable when breaking into abandoned homes with door knobs. It ain't gonna work with the rich folk's homes

Another weapon found in the abandoned city.
This tool is a much more reliable home breaking tool.

Crowbai

The crowbar is found in the middle section of the town, within the hands of an experienced Scavenger. It shows that the user was tanking through the town, but died due to the lack of radiation equipment.

A scavenger's best friend, this metal tool is rusted but much more durable compared to the Machete.
